

We are at a rest stop for a nap on the way to our first camping trip, organized by Mack, of course. I am being ridiculed for lugging this typewriter along but I am hoping for some inspiration from the local flora and fauna.

Mack has practically demanded everyone go for initiation as there is not much time left in the year for it. We are going somewhere near Logan, an hour south of Columbus, which was nice to drive through. It is not a large city but certainly more exciting than where we are locked up.

The caves and walls at our destination, "blackhand sandstone" as I could hear Mack talk about as he drove, are supposed to be gorgeous. Mack is obsessed with the stuff and already took us to Blackhand Gorge last weekend, which was fine but felt synthetic. This is supposed to be more natural.

John is being annoying. Agnes spent the trip recording license plates. She gave me a note. It said:

"Just between you and me, these are my 4 favorite license plates so far: QUIET1 59BPKC NA04M7 XZJV23"

We are all a bit apprehensive of what Mack may have planned. There are rumours of different crazy initiation rituals. Hopefully nothing that involves stripping down past my shorts.
